

The Chris J. and Marshia K.
Witting Surgical Center
at Crouse Hospital

OUR NAMING GIFT DONORS...

Chris Witting, a former president and CEO of Crouse-Hinds Co., served on the Crouse Hospital board for close to 20 years, stepping down in 1993 to become a director emeritus. His wife, Marshia, a former Crouse-Hinds manager and community volunteer, joined him in supporting many local charitable causes in significant but quiet ways. For more than 30 years, the Crouse organization has been one of those causes.

Chris and Marshia Witting

Mr. Witting died in 2005, but Mrs. Witting has continued their tradition of involvement with the hospital, noting that “for those of us who call Syracuse home, the Crouse Health Foundation’s Operation: Innovation campaign offers an extraordinary opportunity for us to secure a state-of-the-art surgical center for our community and Central New York.”

“I have pledged my support to this campaign to honor my husband, Chris, and his life in this community.”

“I am also lending his name to the project because he believed Crouse Hospital was synonymous with healthcare excellence.” Crouse is honored by Mrs. Witting’s passion for this project, as well as by her generous tribute to her late husband, a pioneer in the fields of television, manufacturing and entrepreneurship.

The Crouse Health Foundation is deeply grateful for the Witting’s generous support of this campaign. Since they have sought no public recognition for the majority of their philanthropic gifts, we are very pleased to have been given this opportunity to associate their names with this important project.
